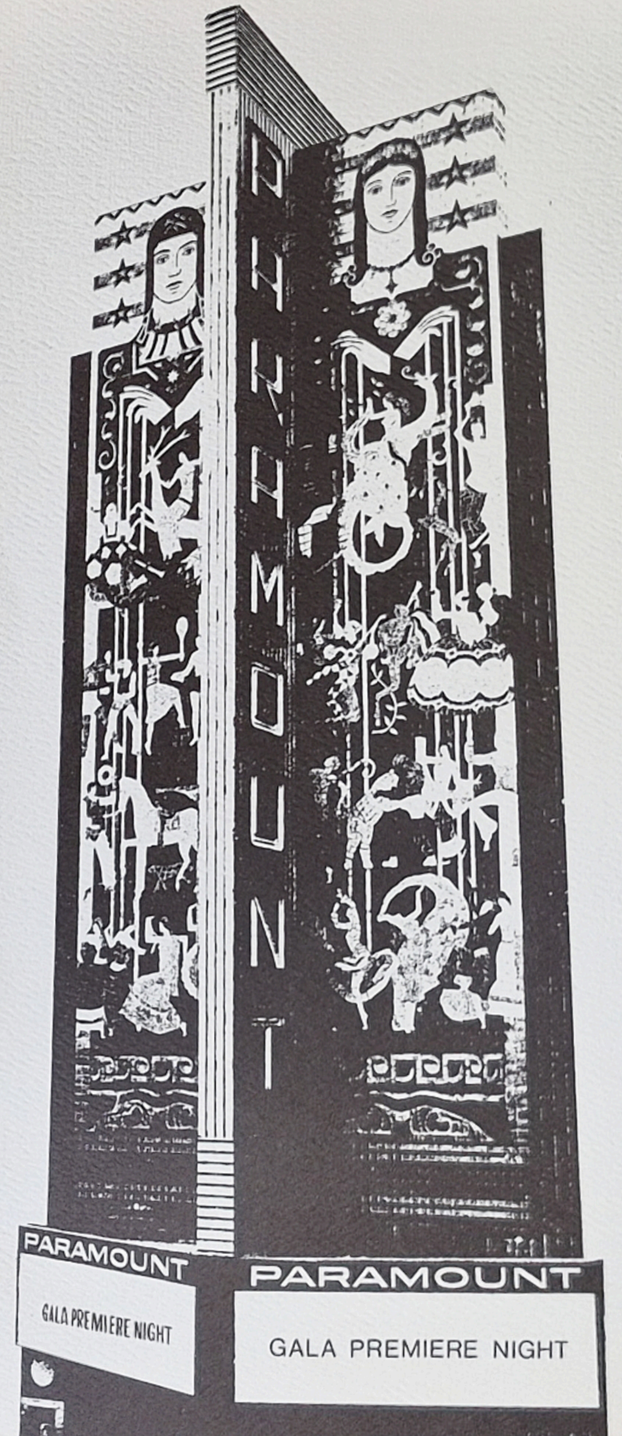
THE PARAMOUNT PLAYS AGAIN



welcome

...to the Premiere Benefit for the Paramount Theatre of the Arts.

Your awareness of a need for a theatre of the arts, and your support — as witnessed by your presence here — has made this evening possible.

With your help, the Paramount has become the first great "Movie Palace" in the United States to be restored to its historical value while simultaneously being renovated as an all-arts theatre.

Its facilities and the fidelity of its restoration make it unsurpassed — not just for the music, song, dance and laughter of tonight — but as a showcase for all the arts.

The Paramount will serve as "The" theatre for premiere performances by the first rank of talent from the entire world.

There will be many, many memorable evenings to come. For these ... our thanks to YOU.

PARAMOUNT THEATRE OF THE ARTS

The Paramount's Broadway Entrance & Marquee (left) has been dedicated to Donald J. & Ruth J. Will as "The Grand Entrance," commemorating the theatre-going public and the artists themselves who experience a new dimension of the arts by entering this incomparable Theatre.

Conceived for both motion pictures and stage presentations, the Oakland Paramount was designed by San Francisco-born Timothy L. Pflueger (1892-1946) whose mastery of theatre architecture is but one facet of an international reputation.

Built at the height of Pflueger's career, the Paramount reflects the style with which he is most identified: that known today as Moderne or Art Deco. First brought before the world at the Paris Exposition of 1925 ("L'Exposition des Arts Decoratifs et Industriels Modernes"), Moderne represented a dramatic break from tradition, and offered a degree of freedom never previously available.

Highly acclaimed at the time of its construction, the Paramount is recognized today as one of the finest Moderne designs in the world. Documented in 1972 by the Historic American Buildings Survey, the theatre was entered into the National Register of Historic Places on August 14, 1973, because of its exceptional importance and historical value.

The National Register, compiled by the U.S. Department of the Interior, is recognized as a protective inventory of irreplaceable resources which are tangible reminders of the history of the United States. Others listed include Carnegie Hall, Library of Congress, Statue of Liberty, Washington Monument and Ford's Theatre.

Restored to its original appearance, the Paramount stands today as an irreplaceable souvenir of the past and a priceless legacy to the future.

history

Publix Theatres, the exhibition wing of Adolph Zukor's Paramount Pictures' empire, broke ground for the Oakland Paramount Theatre on December 11, 1930. Sold by Publix during construction, the theatre was opened on December 16, 1931, by Fox-West Coast Theatres, known later as National General Theatres, Inc. The Fox circuit ran the Paramount until its closing on September 15, 1970.

During that year and the next, a series of studies were undertaken to find a suitable home for The Arts in Oakland. However, construction of a "Performing Arts Hall" or "Arts-Convention Complex" did not appear practicable. Therefore, engineering studies were made of the shuttered Paramount.

Deemed ideal, the Paramount was approved for purchase by the Oakland Symphony Orchestra Association at a special meeting of the Association's Board of Directors on June 2, 1972. The purchase from National General Theatres, Inc. was consummated on October 19 and restoration commenced on December 27. The Theatre reopens its doors tonight, September 22, 1973, as the "Paramount Theatre of the Arts".

DIAMOND GRADING

In order to seek uniformity of both terminology and standards, the American Gem Society recently published its own manual on "Diamond Grading Standards." Under this system, the quality factors of Cutting, Color and Clarity of a diamond are graded on a 0 to 10 basis. A Diamond which is cut to ideal proportions, is colorless and flawless, would be graded as "0/0/0". The poorest quality diamond would grade at "10/10/10". Tolerances are much narrower in the better grades, but broader in the poorer grades. A diamond which might grade for Cutting, or Color, of Clarity at "5" therefore, is much closer to the ideal "0" than it is to the grade of "10" (See diagram).

Note that fine grades of a diamond have a closer tolerance towards the grade of "0". The poorer grades show a broader tolerance towards the grade of "10". Few diamonds on the market today will actually measure up to the ideal of 0/0/0. However, a diamond can vary two or three grades from the ideal in any of the quality factors-Cutting, Color, or Clarity, or in any combination-and still be a very fine and desirable gem.

Only members of the American Gem Society trained in this advanced system of diamond grading and users of the "Diamond Grading manual can offer Diamonds graded with this system.
